IMPACT LENS SERIES

Introducing the Impact Lens Series by GYWS - A new initiative to spotlight the inspiring stories behind the generous individuals who power our mission of education, welfare, and empowerment.

The inaugural episode features Mr. Yaswanth Chowdary Mallina, Senior Data Scientist at Kotak Mahindra Bank and former External Relations Officer at GYWS. Inspired by his grandfather—a retired teacher who selflessly supported education—Yaswanth’s journey in philanthropy began at IIT Kharagpur, where he found purpose in the work GYWS was doing.

His visits to Jagriti Vidya Mandir (JVM), the school run by GYWS, left a lasting impression. Witnessing students' and parents' gratitude made him realize the real impact of educational support. “You actually see the change you’re part of,” he shared.

For Yaswanth, education is the most powerful form of giving—it uplifts individuals, transforms families, and creates a ripple of positive change. He believes support should go beyond donations—offering internships, job referrals, and mentorship can help students truly thrive.

Though he modestly calls his donations “a drop in the ocean,” he emphasizes that collective action drives real change. Yaswanth also praised GYWS for its transparency and communication, which builds trust and keeps supporters engaged.

Drawing from his outreach experience, he recommended amplifying GYWS’s work through local and national media, newsletters, alumni networks, and CSR collaborations. He also advocated for creative teaching and nurturing each student’s unique strengths—whether in academics, arts, or sports.

Would he contribute again? “Absolutely.” Yaswanth continues to support the cause and encourages others to join in. Among his fondest memories: JVM students’ Independence Day performances and the lasting friendships built during his time at GYWS.
